TROUBLEMAKER

Hi Guys, I completely understand the terrific people of the AS community want to talk about the war in Ukraine. However, people come to AS to escape the real world.

I will allow myself disagree with that, Chris - this D stands for "disagree", not "dumb post" or "dumb poster" or for eg "extremist leftist", "lunatic", "laughable bubble guy" etc which you yourself seem to suggest are allowed here on AS:

@The Computer Audiophile I have some reflections on the following sequence of events, please correct me if I'm wrong. Priaptor to PYP: 14 hours after I reported this post: For which Priaptor gets 'thank you' from C...

I disagree cause actually the war topic on the music forum was a 'hot' topic for days which rarely happens here.

Similar topic on the general forum was 'hot' for a number of hours, meanwhile no other thread was 'hot'.

It's obviously your forum, your party, you decide. We are guests here but this party wouldn't take place without both - you and us - the AS members, please don't forget.

The way I see it is very simple - if I don't want to post or read about war, I simply skip a thread on the topic. I have never opened a huge number of threads I'm not interested in, just like everyone here, I believe.

I actually somehow tend to think that your dislike for non-music, non-audio topics is caused by something else than unpopularity of such topics. I tend to think that it comes out of your unwillingness to moderate this forum.

Well, for me personally it's also very simple, you have a dog - you are supposed to walk it, you have a forum - you are supposed to moderate it by yourself or let others moderate it. If you don't walk the dog - your house may begin to stink. IMO similar thing may happen to an unmoderated, undermoderated or badly moderated forum..

As for me I'd personally opt for an 'OT' subforum, there are many brilliantly intelligent and knowledgeable people here and I'm sure there would be no shortage of topics. I'm also sure it could also generate lots of traffic on your site. Such subforums are present on other audio forums and are often very popular and doing fine.

What do you think, guys.?
